The entire evidence taken in the trial was piled up in front of McKane's lawyers, making a breastwork about four feet long and two feet high.

Col. James opened the argument or the appeal shortly after noon. The first point he made was that the proceedings their inception for want of jurisdiction the Grand Republic.

White Men Among the Guests.

Six hundred Chinese, who may or may not be losing their inclination to follow "ways that are dark," under the softening influence of Christianity as taught them by pretty American women in Sunday schools, sailed away from Jewell's Wharf, Brooklyn, at 9.30 o'clock this morning, on the steamer Grand Republic, bound for Cold Spring Harbor.

Besides the Celestials there were 800 white people on board. Of these 750 were women and the remainder men, who with few exceptions, wore pale blue neck-their inception for want of jurisdiction. He held that Gov. Flower had no authority to appoint an Extraordingry Court of Oyer and Terminer: that Justice Cullen had no jurisdiction to order a Grand Jury drawn under Gov. Flower's order; that such Grand Jury had no power and that the session of the Oyer and Terminer at which McKane was tried, convicted and sentenced was a nullity. The reason given for these points was that Gov. Flower exercised a royal prerogative without any authority whatever to do so. The second point raised was that it was illegal for more than one Grand Jury to be in session in the same county at the same time.

Mr. James claimed as his third point that the indictment under which McKane was convicted was insufficient, in that it did not contain a plain and concise statement of the acts constitute a crime. Col. James declared that McKane was incompetent to commit the crime charged because of the absence of any provision of law making him culpable, and because there was no existing statute declaring the acts charged to be a crime.

Col. James said that eight distinct frimes were huddled into one indictment. He held that Justice Bartlett erred in several rulings upon evidence in admitting testimony and extraneous matter, which prejudiced the jury.

In concluding the argument on this boint Col. James said: "If the Court had taken one-half the pains to show the jury how they could and should convict him there would nove have been any occasion for this appeal."

A swarm of small boys, who apparently had a knowledge of Chinese human nature after a few Sunday-school lessons, were on hand with big bunches of red roses to sell. The flowers went off like hot cakes, and it was a very plain and uninteresting young woman who was not the recipient of at least a half dozen of the red blossoms.

There was a great sensation when the Grand Republic was seen rounding the Battery with bunting flying from every possible point and the Chinese flag floating from the main flagstaff.

Miss Kelley, of the Atlantic Avenue Missionary work in Brooklyn, was halded by her lieutenant, Miss Sweezy, in marshalling the big crowd and getting the Mongolians safely on board the steamer.

Boyden, the famous inventor. The suit is brought by Obediah Boyden, son of Seth, against Alderman Bragaw, the executor of John Burnett's estate.

Boyden claims that he was hypnotized into consenting to allow the burial of Mr. and Mrs. John Burnett in the family plot and that then the executor had a monument erected in the lot. This monument took up valuable room and Boyden wants it removed.

Mrs. Burnett was Seth Boyden's daughter. Obediah Boyden also testified that Bragaw threatened to break Mrs. Burnett's will and keep Obediah from getting the furniture of the estate unless he consented to allow the Burnetts to be buried in the plot.

A portly north-sider, well known in political and mercantile circles, has a habit of lingering away from his home until what the society reporter always calls "the wee sma' hours," greatly to the chagrin of a pretty and loving wife, says the Philadelphia Press. Although she has repeatedly upbraided him for this disagreeable habit, he invariably listens with respect and beaming good nature to her nightly curtain lectures, and then rolls over and goes to sleep.

One morning last week his night-key was inserted in the front-door keyhole at precisely 4.13 o'clock, central time. The wife heard him kick a chair on his way to the stairs, and she met him on the landing. There was blood in her eye.

"Look here, sir," she said, seriously.
